VELOCITEACH WINS 2007 PACESETTER AWARD

Atlanta – April 13, 2007 – Velociteach, a leader in project management education, was given the prestigious Pacesetter Award. The Atlanta Business Chronicle gives the Pacesetter Award to the 50 fastest-growing private companies in Atlanta.

Velociteach has experienced dramatic growth since being founded in 2002. To qualify for this award, companies must be headquartered in Atlanta, be privately held, and have annual revenues between $1 million and $300 million. The award is given to the 50 fastest-growing companies that meet those requirements.

“We are very honored by this,” said Velociteach CEO, Andy Crowe, who received the award on behalf of the company. “We are not only in the education business, but we’re in the relationship-building business as well. From day one, we took the time to get to know our customers personally, and we responded personally to their needs. Word of mouth and viral marketing drove this growth. We’re expecting it to continue, and the entire team is working to make sure the growth is deliberate and smart.”

Chris Goethe, Velociteach’s Director of Business Development, said, “The affirmation of the success of our project management training is in securing high-profile repeat clients like Siemens, Microsoft, Accenture, and Computer Sciences Corporation. We love what we do and can’t do too much of it.”

Velociteach is an Atlanta based company passionate about the dissemination of best practices in project management. Their project management training classes, combined with books and e-learning platform, InSite, lead the industry in innovation and results.
